What fees will I pay?

The costs you incur in your brokerage account are based on specific brokerage transactions and not the aggregate value of assets in your account. This cost as it relates to stocks and bonds is typically a brokerage commission in addition to the price of the investment. Additional costs include regulatory fees assessed on all sale trades. Further fees include exchange fees, which in the case of a rebate provided by the exchange, will be credited to you. In addition, margin interest will be assessed against your account if you purchase securities on margin (buying on margin is the act of borrowing money to buy securities).

You will pay fees and costs whether you make or lose money on your investments. Fees and costs will reduce the amount of money you make on your investments over time. Please make sure you understand what fees and costs you are paying.

Conversation Starters:

Help me understand how these fees and costs might affect my investments. If I give you $10,000 to invest, how much will go to fees and costs, and how much will be invested for me?

What are your legal obligations to me when providing recommendations? How else does your firm make money and what conflicts of interest do you have?

SGA does not make recommendations to you as your broker-dealer. The way we make money creates some conflicts with your interests. You should understand and ask us about these conflicts because they can affect the services we provide you. An example would be that SGA earns revenue off commissions you produce through your trading activity. If SGA did provide recommendations, the Firm would have to act in your best interest and not the Firm's interest ahead of yours.

How might your conflicts of interest affect me, and how will you address them?

How do your financial professionals make money?

Our financial professionals are salaried employees. Our financial professionals do not earn a percentage of fees generated by the account.

Conversation Starters:

Is it worth paying for financial advice or would I be better off doing it myself?

Do you or your financial professionals have legal or disciplinary history?
